Advancing the care of persons with chronic illness and disability across the continuum

Elaine Tilka-Miller, DNS RN CRRN FAAN FAHA, Editor

Rehabilitation Nursing is an essential bimonthly resource for nurses who provide rehabilitation and restorative care to individuals with chronic illnesses and disabilities. This journal contains information that will

- apply to your practice
- help you understand the changes in rehabilitation and health care
- challenge you to learn and grow professionally

Published by the Association of Rehabilitation Nurses, Rehabilitation Nursing reaches more than 18,000 readers with every issue. The journal features

- up-to-date information on a broad spectrum of rehabilitation nursing topics
- editorials and commentaries on current issues and trends in health care

- articles on such topics as clinical practice, administration, education, and research
- in-depth case studies
- practical implications of clinical innovations and research
- nursing perspectives, resource reviews, and product information

In addition, each issue includes at least two articles that nurses can read to earn continuing education credit.

Rehabilitation Nursing contains a wealth of information for anyone practicing rehabilitation nursing across the continuum of care. Order your subscription today!
